Human Geography covers a wide range of topics from environmental and landscape changes to planetary urbanisation and economic crises. The scope of the subject is such that it will give you an excellent scientific base that can easily be combined with other academic subjects.

The Master’s programme in Human Geography aims to provide students with:

- knowledge of the development of theories in human geography and their relations to theories in other social and environmental sciences
- understanding of the spatial dimensions of social, economic, cultural and environmental processes and their importance for welfare and living conditions in various geographical contexts
- skills in methods and the use of advanced tools to analyse the complex relations between development processes on local, regional, national and global scales
- competence to carry out scientific investigations, analyses and advanced planning related to political, economic, social and environmental issues in an increasingly complex world

“As long as you are interested in analysing and broadening your knowledge, understanding discourses and geographical patterns, and have an interest in inequality, then it’s a great programme! Human geography is well respected as a discipline since you use both qualitative and quantitative research methods, as well as GIS. If you are interested in the world, people and places, and if you’re open-minded enough to be able to change your perspective, or at least understand a variety of perspectives, then it’s an interesting programme to study.”
